

RIPM Annual Report, 2016

RIPM Jazz Periodicals

As was reported at last year's conference in New York, RIPM has begun work on the creation of a searchable full-text database of jazz periodicals in collaboration with the Institute of Jazz Studies at Rutgers University and RIPM's Partner and Participating Libraries. Significant progress has occurred in the past year involving scanning, processing, and licensing of journals. We anticipate the new database to be available in 2017 with approximately 100 journals.

Expansion of the e-Library

The RIPM e-Library will grow by the end of 2016 to 100 journals through the addition of 65 new titles. When this occurs, access to the publication will require a subscription with a substantial discount for those who subscribe to the Retrospective Index with Full Text (RIPM Online Archive). Since its debut in December of 2013, this publication has been available to all subscribers to the RIPM Online Archive at no additional cost.

The additional 65 journals are:

Cessation of RIPM-in-Print

The final volumes of the RIPM-in-Print series are currently in press. This summer it will cease publication having produced 318 volumes. When Robert announced at the 1987 IAML and IMS conferences that RIPM-in-Print would publish ten volumes per year, the announcement was greeted with more than a few polite smiles. Now, twenty-eight years later, I regret that Robert cannot be here today to smile inwardly, reporting that there was indeed an error in his initial projection, namely, that the rate of annual production was more than eleven volumes per year, not ten. Exceeding our goal is a practice that we continue in our online production.

Wikipedia

RIPM renewed its partnership with Wikipedia, allowing the latter's editors, with a significant number of edits and original contributions, access to RIPM to improve and expand Wikipedia's musical entries.
